Beth's relationship with Chase is growing from strength to strength. Chase has big plans for their future but Beth isn't sure about his motive.

A bidding war erupts in the Bay when the Bradford manor house is finally put up for sale. Chase has his heart set on buying the place but Beth isn't convinced. The house is a complete wreck. Not only is it rumoured to be haunted but according to a local legend it is also the hiding place of the privateer, Henry Morgan's, lost treasure.

When they discover the realtor, Angela Prescott dead in the master bedroom, Beth decides that the house definitely isn't for her. The mysterious cipher text in Angela's hand has Beth convinced that her death is somehow related to the buried treasure and it's ghostly past. Chase isn't buying it, Angela was not well liked and he thinks that there's a more logical explanation for her murder.

Beth takes on a bet, to solve the murder and convince Chase not to risk their future on the crumbling manor house. Beth sets about uncovering the secret of the house's ghostly past but her investigation takes an unexpected turn when she discovers an ancient secret that has excited treasure hunters flocking to the Bay.
