When Isaiah asked Myesha to move in with him, he was hoping she would agree to marry within the first few months. He never dreamed he'd be "shacking up" almost a year later. Pressured by his parents and his own convictions, Isaiah struggles to choose between his girl and his God.

Myesha cares deeply for Isaiah, but she will not be pressured into marrying him based on beliefs she doesn't really understand. And if his parents are any indication of what it means to be a believer, they can keep that religion to themselves!

But just when their relationship seems to fall apart, an unexpected change of heart makes all the difference.
