Plan to survive: befriend a monster. Not in the plan: falling in love with him. As one of the few humans left alive, Lyric knows a hundred different ways to survive-none of them pretty. Anything to stay out of the "farms" where the not-so-mindless zombies keep humans they eat to prevent themselves from rotting. But humans have to eat too. While foraging for food, she's captured and taken to a farm. Her fate seems sealed-until she notices one of the zombies watching her with a different kind of hunger in his eyes. Anson clings to the hope that he can somehow overcome the disease that turned him into a cannibal. Lyric stirs needs and desires he's forgotten he had, and her fighting spirit brings back the ragged edge of a past that long ago slipped from his memory. When Anson offers moments of freedom in exchange for her help, Lyric grabs the chance to survive. She never thought her emotions would cast a very different light on the monster...or that desire would complicate her plan to escape. Warning: Contains a hopeless romantic zombie trying to find his humanity, and a plucky heroine desperate for a way out-even if it's down a zombie's pants. Not for the faint of heart...or the squeamish. Let's just say kissing is off the menu.
