Whether you're a beginner or a seasoned writer, most of us struggle with the age old battle of "Show. Don't tell". But let's face it—sometimes you have to tell and when you do, it needs to be in a way that captures the reader's attention and draws them into the world you are trying to create. Coming up with descriptive words can sometimes be a challenge, not to mention knowing where to start.

Well now there is Word Bank. Word Bank is a great writing tool to help you, the writer, be descriptive whether you are trying to show or tell. Word Bank has been designed with the writer in mind; it's a quick-no frills reference tool with an easy-to-use navigation list. Just select the word you are trying to describe from the table of contents such as "eyes" and get a wonderful list of creative ways to describe a person's eyes.

Then choose what you like from the list or mix and match to come up with your own descriptive style.

What makes Word Bank so powerful is that it's created by many contributors, not just one person. Word Bank is updated quarterly at no additional charge for those who have already purchased it, so if you have fantastic descriptive words that you would like to share and have included, submission is just a click away.
